SECTION 04

The roles at a glance

Parent company identifies the company at the head of the ownership chain. Here, that company is 49G HOLDING LTD.

IP owner identifies the company that owns the specified intellectual property. Holding owns the core Platform IP and the IP in the three specialist entries.

Operator identifies the company assigned to a product or capability. Technology operates the Platform; Inc. operates 49AION and Partner Program; Capital operates HyperHedge.

Core Platform Company, or CoreCo, identifies the single company holding the central Platform role at a given time. BITLEASE TECHNOLOGY LTD is the current holder.

Founder Office is the strategic and architectural function that shapes and stewards the institutional model. The relevant companies put that direction into action through their respective governance and authority.

These terms describe different relationships. Read together, they show how 49G combines a single ownership structure with clearly assigned product and operating roles.
